But the U. S. Senate

Doesn't Elect

American Governors

It is unparalleled arrogance the United States senate has reached the domestic political affairs of the state of Florida and "ordered" its governor, Fuller Warren, appear for questioning by the subcommittee investigating committee.

Over the week-end Senator Herbert O'Connor, of the senate committee, signed a subpoena "ordering" the governor to appear. Governor Warren has the courage of a mouse he will tear that subpoena into fine bits — in full view of the press and newsreel cameras.

When has the United States ever begun electing state governors as "orderings" them? This is the sole privilege of the citizens of the respective states, and to a governor's sole obligation.

Make no defense of Governor Warren's political morality. They — the senate investigating committee — says — his administration was put into office by voters. It does not matter. It is nothing on earth to do with the state government. It is an issue of the people of Florida to decide.

The only issues on which federal authority can come into the electoral life of an individual are: Treason, misuse of federal funds, and failure to maintain order. The whimsicalities of state and local elections belong to the people back home — not to the line-hunting Washington politicians.

The politics of state elections is the best in the world. The do not always elect governors of whom they are lastingly tired. But the alternative offered federal dictation would be men pointed from Washington, and in power by federal bayonets. It is an alternative to which the occasional look in the garden of the states seems like a rose.

And finally, I don't like the idea the United States senate taking holding pay out of our Arkansas salaries in order to finance an invasion down to Florida to meet gambling governor.

That's one reason why our federal bosses today are almost as high as the peak of World War II.

Improvements Needed on Some Farms

There are many farms in Hempstead County that need either erosion control, drainage, fences, permanent pastures, adequate water supply for livestock, or permanent improvement in the form of lime-tone or fertilizers, according to V. M. Sparks, County Supervisor of the Farmers Home Administration.

In pointing out the various needs of the farmer for farm improvements, or combinations of various needs, Mr. Sparks stated that the Farmers Home Administration is a source of credit through which the farmer can make the necessary improvements in order to secure increased income from his farm.

Credit through the Farmers Home Administration is available to improve farms by building terraces, contouring, drainage ditches, fencing, adding limestone to certain types of fertilizers to the soil, cutting rough land preparatory to building permanent pastures, or the purchase of seed, fertilizer for permanent pastures. Credit is also available for developing ponds for livestock, re-fencing, or putting in cross fences for rotation of pastures for livestock, or for the repair of existing fences.

Mr. Sparks pointed out that any one desiring credit for these types of improvement should contact the Farmers Home Administration office located in the court-house for additional information in applying for such loans.

Crime Probers to Take Up Dope Problem

Washington, June 25 — The senate crime probers will be back on television tomorrow — and this time they may be questioning dope addicts.

Sen. Herbert R. O'Connor (D-Md.) chairman of the crime investigating committee, said last night the two-day hearings which open in Washington tomorrow will be televised by the National Broadcasting company through Station WNBW in Washington.

The broadcasts were "cleared" with NBC, the Maryland Democrat said, with the provision they be made available to all other television networks on a "strictly non-commercial basis."

The hearings will center on the three basic phases of the nation's narcotics traffic.

O'Connor said the committee will attempt in these exploratory sessions to determine the extent of the traffic, the methods of illegal distribution of drugs and the effects of narcotics addiction, both upon its victims and on society.

Between 12 and 15 witnesses will testify. Their names were determined during conferences with counsel and committee staff members yesterday, O'Connor said, but will not be made public prior to their appearance.

Among them will be administrators of hospitals and custodial institutions, criminologists and medical men, as well as some victims of the drug habit, he added.

"Several among those to be heard are co-operating with the committee and will appear voluntarily," O'Connor said. "Others may be subpoenaed."

"At this initial point, we are not focusing upon any one section of the state, but seeking insight into the fundamentals as they apply nationally."

He said it is not possible to say how the committee will proceed until the general overview picture develops in the testimony tomorrow and Wednesday.

The public hearings will open at 10 a. m. tomorrow.

It will be the first time narcotics sessions have been televised.

The sensational gambling hearings conducted by the committee with Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) as chairman were viewed by millions via television.

The committee's investigations into the drug traffic have consisted so far of closed hearings in prisons and hospitals.

Series of Auto Wrecks Leave Three Injured

A series of automobile accidents in this section kept local and state officers busy and at least three persons were injured enough to be taken to hospitals.

About 6 a. m. today an auto driven by John Howard Nelson, 21, of Chicago crashed into a truck driven by Marion Bailey, 35, of Pike City, Arkansas, a mile north of Emmet.

Investigating officer Travis Ward of the State Police said Nelson apparently dozed but the wheel of the car which hit the truck, knocking the dual wheels almost off and traveling about 75 feet before crashing into an embankment.

Al Jicko, 23, riding with Nelson was taken to a Prescott hospital for treatment. His condition was not believed of a critical nature.

Another passenger, Leroy Fortor, was not injured, nor was Bailey, although the truck and car were practically demolished.

About 1:30 a. m. Sunday an automobile driven by Imon Brantley of Houston, Texas collided with another driven by Ella Atkins of Hope at the Third and Greening Street crossing. Mrs. Atkins suffered head injuries and Mrs. Brantley was injured. Both were admitted to a local hospital for treatment.

Investigating city officers arrested Brantley of charges of driving while drunk and no drivers license. Another woman passenger riding with the Brantleys was arrested for drunkenness. Both vehicles were badly damaged.

Saturday night State Officers Ward and Downing were summoned to investigate a 3-way wreck on the Red Lake road near Fulton. Three automobiles were badly damaged but nobody was hurt.

J. B. Stuart was fixing a flat and another car driven by Hollis Johnson auto, swerved it around in the street a jack. A third car driven by Allison Woodberry hit the Johnson auto, swerved it around in the road and locked all three vehicles in a triangle. Officers said it took some doing to untangle the locked cars, all of which were damaged.

At least three other accidents were investigated by city officers during the weekend, but nobody was hurt.

One occurred at Third and Main and involved autos driven by Leroy Williams of Emmet Rt. 2 and Eddie Bayell of Hope. Powell's car was damaged considerably.

Late Saturday minor damages resulted when a truck driven by Floyd Pharris collided with a car driven by Wilton Vines. Vines, officers said, was backing out of a driveway.

Earlier Saturday an auto driven by Mrs. R. A. Sooter backed out of a parking space near Kroger and A (P) Stores and dented the fender of a car driven by George Brown.

Woman's Club May Run Candidate for Alderman

With the deadline only a few days away, midnight June 30, the field of candidates for city offices appeared to be settling down somewhat with no new developments over the weekend.

However, there was one report that might prove to be startling. A local woman club is considering entering a woman as a candidate for an alderman post.

Battle Looms Over Cutting Money Bills

Washington, June 25 — (AP) — A battle between President Truman and congress over reform cutting appropriation bills was in the making today.

A congressional friend of the President, who may not be named, told a reporter Mr. Truman will veto any bill on which congress imposes a horizontal, or blanket, cut.

He represented the President as feeling that such an approach to reduction of government funds is unwise, unjustified and "an abdication by congress of its own duties."

"The President believes," the informant continued, "that if congress wants a certain amount out from the appropriation bills, it should cut that amount in specific places which can stand a cut, but shouldn't treat every item alike because some of them can't be reduced without damaging essential activities while others might be trimmed more."

If the President vetoed an appropriations bill and congress failed to pass another without the provisions he objected to the agency affected might find itself completely without money.

Cuts of ten per cent in most personnel items have been voted by the senate or two regular appropriations bills, although the house has not yet agreed to the senate action. The senate finance the labor department, the federal security agency and a score of independent agencies.

If similar cuts are applied by the senate on other money bills, sponsors claim they can save the tax payers around $500,000,000.

Instead of applying a percentage cut to all personnel items, the house has voted to prohibit the filling of more than one out of every four vacancies in most government jobs during the next fiscal year. It excepted all employees of congress and some employees of other agencies.

The bills being considered finance the agencies for the fiscal year starting July 1. Although none of them is expected to be finally enacted by that date, emergency temporary financing will until the regular funds are provided.

Its Plain Torture Seeing a Woman Make Herself Sick Giving the Painter Orders

By HAL BOYLE
New York — (AP) — The crisis is past. The painters have trooped out at last, leaving our place in chaos but with a lot of bright new colors on the walls.

But I don't think I could ever go through the same ordeal again. I can't stand to see my wife suffer so.

Recently Frances came to me and said:

"Well, I guess you had better go away to one of your wars or rebellions, Rover."

"Why?" I asked.

"Because it is time to have the apartment repainted," she said. "And every time it happened before you always manage to find a war or something to run off to."

That is true. But after nearly 14 years of marriage I decided to stay home this time, and we would face the painters together.

"You will be a lot of help with your cute little eleven thumbs," laughed Frances. "I don't know whether I can put up with you and the painters both."

My idea of having the house painted was to sit in my favorite chair, sip a highball, and break into encouraging applause whenever one of the painters made a particularly fine brush stroke.

But it isn't like that at all. First you carry your paintings and a little brace over to leave with friends. They have their own storage problems, and they greet you as if you had arrived with a horse to park in their back room.

Next you roll up the rugs and send them to the cleaners. Then you pile everything else in the center of the room. Two bachelor friends and I had a great time doing this. I hadn't had so much fun since we "stacked" the room for the furniture pal in college.

World Talks Peace But the Fighting Rages

Tokyo, June 25 — (AP) — The world talked of peace, but the Korean war raged into its second year today.

Chinese and North Korean Reds were more aggressive all along the 100-mile battlefront.

The cease-fire and armistice proposal by Russia's Jacob Malik had put no damper on the fighting.

Red ground forces showed more fight than usual. But by late afternoon there was still no sign of their expected anniversary offensive.

Allied officers, noting an ominous enemy buildup in the west had predicted a limited Communist counterattack to celebrate the war's first birthday.

Thirty red-nosed MIG-15 jets darted back and forth across the Yalu river boundary of Manchuria Monday, jockeying for position to attack Fifth U. S. Air Force F-8 Sabre jets.

One of the Russian-made planes was shot down in flames. The Reds broke off the 10-minute battle and scurried back to safety in Manchuria.

It was the eighth day in the last nine that jet battles have swirled high over North Korea. The Reds have lost 13 planes destroyed and 20 damaged.

The Allies have lost 11 planes in that period.

One hill changed hands six times in 2 hours of bloody fighting. Reds and U. N. troops met at the top and battled with bayonets, rifles, machine guns and mortars.

The Allies withdrew then, hurled a withering hail of artillery fire on the Red positions. Pilots later spotted enemy dead littering the hillside.

East of Kumhung, the iron triangle's eastern base, the Reds drove Allied tank soldiers off one of their high ground. They were attacking the approaches to Kumhung, their nearest defense position on the central front.

United Nations forces took the high ground shortly after noon. The Communists counterattacked with an estimated battalion an hour later. The Allies withdrew to the base of the hill and called down an artillery barrage on the Reds.

AP Correspondent Nate Colvitz reported from U. S. Eighth army headquarters that the Red threw small probing attacks in most everywhere along the front. They thrust Allied patrols into contact and withdrew without success.

Reds hit from 1000 feet and pulled back. The Allies were able to draw them out.

A task force of U. S. troops and British Commonwealth troops may have hit the flanks of the main Chinese line in the west.

Other front dispatches indicated the Reds were bringing up their big guns in the west. Air observers reported they saw several new types of heavy artillery being moved into the front lines.

The Reds were comparatively quiet on the central and east fronts.

U. S. troops in the west were busy with the usual work of maintaining the front lines. They were also busy with the usual work of maintaining the front lines.

U. S. Ready to Join Any Real Settlement

Tallahassee, Tenn., June 25 — President Truman declared today the United States is ready to join any real settlement of the Korean war, if it will end a partitioned and hostile peninsula.

Mr. Truman made this statement in a speech to the Congress on the anniversary of the Communist invasion of South Korea to make a foreign policy declaration at Tallahassee, Tenn. He also announced that the United States will devote to new studies of the peninsula and support of the United Nations.

The president said the United States must be ready to join any settlement that will truly advance the peace process. But adding a note of caution, he said:

"We must avoid rash actions which would involve the United States in a new war."

When you land that big one that couldn't get away, you may, after the victory, give credit to fishing equipment that can take it. If you do, give partial credit to natural gas that flows through your county. Gas is used in making stainless alloy casting rods, glass fiber rods, tempered hooks, dyes for flies. Even minnow buckets are shaped by gas. And, of course, gas provides the best way to cook the fish.

The fish that couldn't get away from you ... can blame this local angler, too.

The fish doesn't know it, but he can blame this Texas Eastern operator for having had a big part in supplying the tackle that landed him. On the job, the operator who helps run the natural gas pipe lines in your county keeps gas flowing to scores of industries that make many essential commodities. Off the job, he and most of his fellow employees take to fishing as their favorite hobby—relaxing from the job with fishing tackle they helped to make.

DOROTHY DIX Widow's Dilemma

Dear Miss Dix: I find myself in a most unhappy situation and I am asking you for counsel. I am a young widow with a child, and I have managed to make myself fairly secure in the business world. I had been keeping company with a man who has also been fairly successful financially. We both appreciate the nice things in life, such as entertainment, clothes, hobbies, etc. Our families are not the types that would get along together and we are of different religious beliefs.

My friend does not dislike my child but has never shown signs of affection towards her. He assures me that the differences in religion and family background are of no consequence in our case and that he loves me for myself alone. I believed I loved him, but hesitated over marriage, afraid it might not be a success. We quarreled over my indecision and parted.

Since then, I have met another man who has asked me to marry him. He is charming to my baby, our families get along well together and he is more settled in his ways. I think he would be a fine foster father to my child. In the past two months, I have occasionally riel my former boy friend and he has called me, asking to forget our quarrel and go back together again. I believe I still love him, but am assailed with doubt as to whether or not I should accept the man who likes my child and seems a better matrimonial prospect or go back to the one I love.

Answer: With so many doubts in the atmosphere, I don't think either suitor is the man for you. I could certainly never advise you, or anyone else to marry a man you don't love—which would seem to eliminate suitor number two.

And for any young mother with a child to contemplate marriage to a man who is not whole-hearted, fond of her baby is to lay the groundwork for a miserable future. This point alone would make me very wary of suitor number 1, and in conjunction with all the other vital matters on which you don't agree makes him indeed a poor prospect as a husband for you. At this point, either marriage would be disastrous, and you'd be better off continuing as you are, making your own way, supporting your child and being answerable to no one.

Your love for the first young man doesn't seem too strong; perhaps if you stopped seeing him and had him discontinue his phone calls, you might develop a stronger attachment to your second beau. Don't rush into either marriage and perhaps time will resolve the question for you.

Dear Dorothy Dix: What can a wife do with a husband who swears and throws things and breaks up the furniture if anything goes wrong in the home or he has had a bad day at the factory? For twelve years I have been trying to solve the riddle. I am making no head and find out what makes him act the way he does, whether he doesn't like me, or doesn't like marriage, or what's the matter. When we are at home alone at night he never speaks to me. When his friends come to dinner he spends the evening making fun of me, deriding my figure, my walk and how much money I spend. It is hard to keep the tears back and put on a front, and I feel I cannot do it much longer. I would rather go and make my own living than to stand what I do.

Answer: Many husbands use their wives as safety valves for all the bodes and temper and nervousness and irritability that they are not show the outside world. Many a man takes his revenge at the way the world treats him by mistreating his wife, and many a man inflates his own ego by deriding and ridiculing his wife before people and showing how superior he is to her. So because your husband treats you the way he does is no sign that he regrets being married to you or wants to get rid of you. Probably on the contrary, he finds you necessary to his comfort and happiness, because you not only make him a comfortable home, but you afford him an outlet for his spleen.

But perhaps your husband would find more interest in a wife who would fight back instead of taking his ill treatment. You might try it and see.

Dear Miss Dix: I have known this boy for four years and in that time he has shown signs of being in love with me. However, I do not return that love. At present he is in the service and on his last leave we had a misunderstanding. I am wondering whether I should write first or wait for him to take the first step.

Answer: Since you say he has shown "signs of being in love," you do have some doubt about it. If his feeling for you is friendly, it would be a nice gesture on your part to write a note and try to clear up the misunderstanding. Let it be clear, though, that you want to be friends with him and nothing else. If, however, you really do feel that he is in love with you, it would be kinder to let the matter drop, rather than make him hope that you may return his love.

Local Youth One of Six to Study Abroad

By GORDON BROWN
AP Special Washington Service
Washington, June 25 — (AP)— Six young men and women from Arkansas will sail this summer for foreign countries to spend a year in study and research as Fulbright scholars.

The six and their destinations: Joe Thomas Clark, Okolona, to study history at the University of Manchester, England; Auvella Louise Taylor, Clarksburg, to study English literature at the University of Nottingham, England; William Rolan Orton, Jr., Little Rock, to study mathematics at the University of Paris, France; Elsie Marion Ware, Little Rock, to study history at the University of Bordeaux, Bordeaux, France; Charles Miller, Pine Bluff, to study anthropology at the National University of Canberra, Australia; William Saxon McGuire, Gurdon, Ark., to study agronomy at Canterbury Agricultural college, Lincoln, New Zealand.

The Arkansans are among 43 students selected under the Fulbright program for study in 18 foreign countries which have signed agreements with the United States.

Twenty or so additional scholars will be announced later, the state department said.

The 43 recently selected increases to 18 the number of United States students chosen for a year of study abroad. Several Arkansans have been included in previous years.

The student program was set up under an act originated and sponsored by Senator Fulbright (D-Ark). Under the program foreign countries which bought surplus property from the United States after World War II placed the money in funds to be used to defray the expenses of students. This served both to keep scarce dollars in those countries and to inaugurate a widespread study program.

Funds are used to pay transportation, tuition, sustenance and similar expenses of the American students. They also can be used to pay transportation of students from the other countries to the United States but not for sustenance of those students in this country.

However, many hundred foreign students have come to the United States for study.

Government officials have called the program one of the finest methods ever devised to promote understanding and friendship between the United States and other countries.

Fulbright scholars are selected by a presidential board from among applications of advanced students. The deadline for next year's applications is Oct. 16, 1931.

The United States has nearly 6,000,000 farms.

Man Shot While Playing Cards

The victim was Henry Robison, 31, of Newport, a sawmill owner. Sheriff J. F. Mason said Robison and several other men were playing poker in a vacant house in the Horsehoe community, south of here, when a shotgun blast was fired through an open window. Robison was struck and killed. Mason gave no possible motive for the killing. No arrests have been made.

Korean War Has Taught Lessons

Washington, June 23 — (P) — The Korean war, which started a year ago today and caught us flat-footed and unprepared, has had four main results:

1. This country won't soon again be caught quite so helplessly flat-footed for we have begun to arm and prepare in a big way.
2. By going into Korea, which showed our willingness to fight to stop communism, this country undoubtedly upset the Communist's time-table of conquest in Asia and elsewhere.
3. The Western Allies have been welded closer by the realization that communism, unless stopped, would chew up the unprepared part of the world. It spurred them all into re-arming.
4. This country revealed itself to the world as badly split and confused on how to stop communism and what to do next.

Korea was a test. If we had stood by it there, it would have green-lighted communism to gobble up the rest of Asia and move northward in the Middle East and Europe.

We had developed the kind of Maginot line thinking which had led to disaster for the French. Our Maginot was the atom bomb. We had developed an almost childlike and mystical belief in it as the perfect defense.

The Korean outbreak quickly showed us how pitifully unprepared we were to fight a real war, even against North Koreans who lacked bombs and atom bombs.

At the time of the Korean outbreak, the Western Allies were linked together in the Atlantic pact which then was hardly more than a noble promise; a promise to go to one another's help if any member nation was attacked. Actually, it was a paper promise. Korea showed these Allies they were in pretty bad shape to defend anyone, including themselves. Now they've all started to rearm and turn their paper alliance into a military one.

Because it takes a lot of time to set up the machinery for turning out arms, this country and its Allies are far from fully equipped. In a few months, though, the weapons should start moving from the factories.

History may show Russia lost the long cold war with the west by choosing to make a minor test in Korea — which has given the Allies 12 months to get ready — instead of sweeping across Europe while it still was pitifully unready.

But this country has not gone through the Korean experience without great pain. The loss of American lives and one of the most searing spiritual convulsions in the nation's history.

In the Russian purge of the mid-1930's, the old Bolsheviks started the world by getting up in open court, searching their souls, castigating themselves, revealing their thoughts.

In the past year, openly before the world and undoubtedly to the benefit of the Russians, we have exposed our thinking in the disputes over what we should do and what we did wrong. It has been a purge of the American spirit.

Even while we were fighting in Korea we went through months of self-analysis, not unaided with politics, to decide whether we should really stand beside a European ally by sending them troops, instead of arms only.

That was the famous troops-for-Europe debate, started by former President Hoover who tried to persuade the country that we should make the U. S. Gibraltar, using the oceans as a moat, and keep our ground troops at home.

Then, after we decided to send troops, although with qualifications, almost at once, without batting an eye, we apparently feeling our inconsistency, we plunged into the other extreme in our war of self-examination. This was the firing of General MacArthur.

It was a war of support by urging an aggressive war in Asia on the Chinese, even if it meant getting into world war with Russia, which he thought it wouldn't. He represented himself as the man with the answer on how to finish the Korean fighting at a time when the Truman administration was still only hoping — it's still doing that — answer could be found in Korea, short of world war.

At any rate the followers which Hoover and MacArthur both attracted, although with profoundly different views on fighting communism, plus the intense opposition both men met, showed the world that after 12 months of Korea the American people are confused about the future.

Attempts to Save Woman's Life Fail

Whitewater, Wis., June 23 — (P) — A 45-year-old woman whose critical illness prompted a dramatic march fight to Chicago last April died yesterday in a hospital here.

Not until death was the patient's condition hopeless. Relatives and friends who have been known to visit her since she was taken to the hospital in April, were told she was dead.

She was taken to the hospital in April, when she was 45 years old. She had been in poor health since 1910. Her illness was diagnosed as a form of cancer. She had been in the hospital for several months before she died.

U. S. Strength Is Building Up Fast

By ELTON C. FAY

Washington, June 23 — (P) — The U. S. has 100,000 more men under arms than it had a year ago when the Communist invasion of South Korea signaled sudden war. It also has added hundreds of ships and thousands of planes to its operating naval and air fleet.

Actually, the nation has come along so rapidly toward its military mobilization goal that cutbacks have been made in recent draft calls and plans are afoot to release 100,000 army reservists.

Does this mean the U. S. considers the danger of new incidents elsewhere or of a third world war have diminished?

A high government official whose responsibilities include shaping military policies to the estimate of world situations, present and future, was asked by a reporter if the seeming moderation of effort indicated the tensions which followed outbreak of the Korean war had lessened.

"On the contrary, they probably are greater," answered the official, who may not be named.

He outlined some of the reasons:

Added to the persisting, long-present possibility that the Soviet union may elect to start World War III by attack in Europe, there are or have developed other potentially dangerous situations — in Iran, for example.

The Korean war itself, even if it doesn't expand into a global conflict, can impose new demands.

In explaining why he doesn't think the new defense department policies should be considered indicative of a diminished danger, the government official said:

"We are now getting a dividend on the investments we made eight months, ten months, a year ago."

He was referring to the start of mobilization — the draft, the calling up of reservists, demobilization of warships, a stepped-up aircraft and other weapon production. The immediate goal then was to muster available, trained manpower to meet urgent needs imposed by the outbreak of fighting in the Far East. The longer range objective was to train and equip a professional force which ultimately could relieve the reservists called in the emergency. The army announcement that the first reservists would begin to leave next month suggested a belief the goal has been attained.

On June 23, 1950, the total armed forces personnel was about 1,500,000. The present strength is approximately 3,341,000. Of these, about 1,552,000 are army, 850,000 air force, 737,000 navy and 204,000 marines. The objective of the limited mobilization is a force of 3,473,000 men.

The army, where the greatest manpower expansion occurred, is about at its planned strength, although it may be increased in the next year to a point approaching 1,000,000.

The navy has a little farther to go to reach its new size of 810,000 men by June 30, 1952. But in ships, the active fleet already is approaching planned strength. The present force is about 600 ships of all types. The plan is to bring the fleet to a strength of 1,111 ships. Already in service are 27 carriers, three battleships, about 15 cruisers to be increased to 191 and 310 destroyers (to be increased to 248 during the next year).

The air force had 48 groups of bombers, fighters, troop carrier and other types a year ago. Now it has 87. It aims at 95 by a year from now. It had about 413,000 men a year ago, now has approximately 850,000. Because the ultimate expansion may be greater than 25 groups, the eventual manpower strength is uncertain.

Even if a truce brings a cessation of hostilities in Korea, it is unlikely the size of the projected American armed force would be changed. Its size and pattern has been planned with view to containing danger of new possible outbreaks of hostilities in Korea and elsewhere.

Scare Buying Not Likely to Come Back

By SAM DAWSON

New York, June 23 — (P) — Be sure to give your neighbor, the retail merchant, an extra encouragement put on the back from time to time this summer. And remind him that his sales figures aren't actually as bad as they're going to look.

Because the retail merchant is going to be thrown for a loss — by statistics, and on this, the first anniversary of the Korean War, and of the start of the war-scare buying that followed it, your merchant is well aware that in the weeks ahead his sales figures, compared with last year, are going to look bad indeed.

If there's any scare ahead, it's more likely to be peace-scare selling than war scare buying.

As for yourself — you might watch out for a possible outbreak of jitters among retailers, and their bankers, when the minus signs appear week after week in the store sales comparisons. Jitters, fed by the knowledge that store inventories are still high, and peace possible, could lead to price cutting.

And if these bargains do appear, you'd do well to snap them up — if inflation starts again next winter, as some think, these bargains could be the last for a while.

Retail sales are already running behind those of last year in eight of the 12 federal reserve bank districts as measured in dollars and cents. Because of the great hike in prices since Korea, that means that unit volume sales are likely well below last year.

In the weeks ahead, when sales figures will be compared to the phenomenal war-scare buying spree of last summer, the national average may run at least 10 percent below last year in dollar volume, and merchants may be moving round one-fourth fewer units of goods.

Some of that may be because many people have well-stocked closets, and at the same time feel the pinch of higher taxes and high prices. But most of it will be because of what happened last summer.

Hysterical buyers cleared out store shelves in fear of coming shortages after the Reds marched into South Korea. July department store sales jumped 30 percent above those of 1949. August sales volume was up 18 percent and September buying up 11 percent.

The federal reserve board's index of store sales rose from 208 last June to 362 in July, 335 in August, and 320 in September. The board figures the 1935-39 average of sales as 100 in its index.

Only some new, unsighted war scare could send buyers into the stores this summer in any comparable numbers. And most consumers are now shame-facedly aware that their scare buying was senseless — no shortages have yet appeared — and that it only resulted in sending prices sky-high.

All consumers are now paying through the nose for the scare buying — by consumers, merchants and manufacturers — that helped in spiraling inflation on its way.

Latest federal reserve figures on sales show the national average for the week ending June 18 was up one percent from a year before. But that was only because New York's price-war hoopla carried its sales up 11 percent above the same week last year. San Francisco was five percent ahead of a year ago, but eight other districts showed minus signs and the remaining two were just even.

15 Points Unsettled in L. R. Strike

Little Rock, June 23 — (P) — Fifteen points remain to be arbitrated in a contract dispute which led to a five-day public transportation strike here.

AFL bus drivers and mechanics employed by Capital Transit company left their jobs on June 1. They returned under an agreement for a "temporary" wage increase, resumption of negotiations on other issues and submission of A.L.P. issues, which couldn't be negotiated satisfactorily to arbitration.

B. Beryl Brand, president of the union local, said yesterday agreement had been reached on all but 15 points — seven proposed by the company, eight by the union.

Under the strike-ending plan, these issues will be submitted to three arbiters, one to be selected by each side and the third by these two.

Communists Lose Heavy in Indochina

Saigon, Indochina, June 23 — (P) — Communist-led Viet Minh guerrillas fighting the French in Indochina lost 3,500 dead and 1,500 other casualties in the last month, the French command announced last night. Chief Communist spokesman was in the Red river delta area, where they failed in an infiltration move aimed at attacking French and Vietnam forces from the rear.
